

Rife Resurrection

By Barry Lynes

In the latter half of the 1990's decade, the orthodox medical system imploded. New forms of healing suddenly were chosen by huge segments of the American people while drug medicine, surgery and endless high technology diagnostics were increasingly rejected. From this amazing shift to blood cleansing, herbal cures, acupuncture, energy body stimulation, and active physical and mental participation of the patient in the healing process came the revival of various lost or suppressed discoveries from other times. Among the most outstanding was one based on the discoveries of Royal R. Rife, the lost genius of San Diego.

Rife invented a super microscope in the 1930's which enabled him to see a previously invisible, virus-size microbe which existed outside or beyond the human eye's range. Not merely small, this microbe could not be seen even today with an electron microscope! Rife's microscope used light in a revolutionary design that resulted in any microbe being "stained" in its natural colour. (Rife: "The viruses were stained with a frequency of light that co-ordinated with the chemical constituents of the particle or micro-organism under observation.") More important, unlike electron microscopes, a microbe remained alive. This enabled Rife to "zap" different microbes with specific, different, electronic frequencies that killed them.

Once the frequency for the cancer-linked microbe was identified, it was a simple step to test his world-shaking discovery on mice, and then move to clinical treatment of supposedly "terminal" cancer patients. In the summer of 1934, in the seaside village of La Jolla, north of San Diego, Rife and a team of doctors and scientists from the leading medical research facilities of the University of Southern California (U.S.C.) in Los Angeles, Northwestern in Chicago, and other institutions cured 16 terminal cancer patients.

Their methods and instruments were refined over the next four years. Some of North America's most brilliant cancer researchers visited Rife's laboratory and became involved in a secret research committee anchored at U.S.C. Clinical proof of the successful and painless cure of cancer and micro-caused diseases increased as clinics in Los Angeles and San Diego slowly developed documentary proof. Additional laboratory verification came from research institutions in San Francisco, Chicago, New Jersey and Montreal. Meanwhile, ENERGY MEDICINE doctors, using a variety of different electronic approaches, grew in numbers and formed national associations by the late 1930s.

However, the threat to orthodox medicine was too much. Without any consideration for their Hippocratic Oaths or the well-being of their nation, medical officials and medical societies mounted a furious counterattack against Rife's magnificent and monumental discovery using Rife's instruments to treat cancer and other diseases were threatened with losing their licenses and being thrown into jail. Most meekly surrendered.

One of the finest energy medicine laboratory complexes in America, located in New Jersey and in the process of verifying Rife's discoveries, was mysteriously burned to the ground at 3 A.M. while its owner was in California visiting Rife!

Rife himself was hauled into court, prevented from leaving for England where leading scientists were prepared to establish an independent testing facility to substantiate the great discovery, and then distribute world-wide his unique instruments. Rife's financial sponsor died. He began to drink. World War II erupted. All medical journals were censored. One of the greatest scientific and medical discoveries of the 20th century was ruthlessly shoved into a dungeon history.

And then, magically, in the late 1980s and early 1990s, an evolutionary shift slowly began to unfold throughout America and the world. The Biology – “subtle energy” interactions of the human body (bio-energetics) became a serious research area in leading universities, private medical research facilities and government agencies (NASA). A grassroots interest in alternative medicine simultaneously erupted to confront drug medicine practitioners with their failures and expense. From the emerging whirlwind, fed by computers, the internet and “information democracy” howling a new message...emerged anew...interest in Royal R. Rife’s extraordinary cures lost 60 years previously.

Just over the horizon lies the awakening of mainstream America and possibly the delivery of Rife’s lost discoveries, to be integrated into a strikingly different, 21st century healing model, enabling painless, inexpensive methods of curing many diseases to blossom at last.

What this planet lost when the medical powers of his time (and their successors to the present day who continue to cover-up the crime) crushed Rife’s achievement in the late 1930s and early 1940s, and then let his genius waste in isolation until his death in 1971. One can only be imagined. Certainly it was one of the great tragedies of all medical history.
